

Homeshare

Key facts for Commissioners

How does Homeshare work?

In Homeshare, someone who needs some help to live independently in their own home is matched with someone who has a housing need and can provide a little support. This kind of arrangement appears to happen informally with some frequency. Homeshare is an attempt to take a naturally-occurring, mutually beneficial relationship and to facilitate it in a way that makes it safer and accessible to a wider range of people, some of whom will be vulnerable. Homeshare programmes attempt to balance maintaining the non-contractual nature of the relationship with increasing the clarity and safeguards around it.

“Householders” are often older people who own or are tenants in their own home but have developed some support needs or have become isolated or anxious about living alone.

“Homesharers” are often younger people, students, or key public service workers who cannot afford housing where they work. Or they may be unable to access council housing or living in foyer accommodation.

The Homesharer provides an agreed level of help and support to the Householder whilst living in their home for a set period of time. Homeshare is not a regulated service and cannot include the provision of personal care. Homesharers are not charged rent, but usually agree to contribute to household bills and it may be agreed that other costs such as food will be shared. Homeshare is governed by an agreement carefully worded to avoid creating a contract of employment or tenancy rights.

Homeshare arrangements rely on the successful matching of people who are both willing and able to bring something of value to the arrangement. Homeshare schemes recruit and assess participants, providing CRB checks for Homesharers. The process of matching compatible participants is crucial to the success of arrangements. Schemes then provide an agreed amount of care and support to maintain matches and deal with any concerns which arise. They support participants when Homeshare arrangements come to an end.

The participants may be charged for participating. Some schemes are self-financing through charging, particularly in areas where accommodation or home support is expensive or hard to obtain. Participants who are eligible for state support for assessed social care needs may be able to use a personal budget to cover the costs of Homesharing.

What are the benefits of introducing Homeshare to my area?

There are 11 Homeshare schemes in six locations in the UK. NAAPS supports a national network of schemes. Homeshare is small in the UK but significant in many other countries.

UK pilots supported by the Department of Health and the Home Office and a number of other well-established programmes have drawn on evidence of successful Homeshare programmes abroad and have in turn contributed to a body of learning about how Homeshare can work in the UK.

Homeshare can benefit people who own or rent a home, such as:

- older people who need low level support or are anxious or isolated;
- disabled people who need support to move towards or maintain independent living;
- family carers who are struggling with isolation or who juggle work and caring.

Homeshare can benefit people who lack affordable housing, such as:

- students and key public service workers on modest means;
- people who are saving towards the cost of a house or who have debt problems;
- people at the bottom of council house waiting lists or living in foyer accommodation.

Homeshare benefits communities because it:

- provides low-level and preventative support at little cost;
- tackles housing shortages and makes better use of housing stock;
- allows key public service workers to live in expensive inner city areas;
- increases community cohesion and inter-generational contact.

Homeshare programmes can produce savings and efficiencies:

- reduced use of services such as residential care;
- reduced risks of falls, better health and well-being for older people;
- reduced use of fire, police and ambulance services;
- reduced pressure on housing provision;
- increased affordability of higher education;
- easier recruitment to lower paid public service jobs;

Will Homeshare work in my area?

Evidence from the UK and overseas suggests Homeshare is most successful in urban areas where:

- there are significant numbers of older people living alone;
- property is expensive to rent or buy;
- transport links are good;
- there are significant student populations including mature and overseas students.

Homeshare can face greater challenges in rural areas where transport links are poor and employment or higher education opportunities limited. However, some new rural schemes have identified large groups of young people at the bottom of council house waiting lists or living in foyer accommodation.

What would it cost to introduce Homeshare to my area?

The costs of Homeshare are those of advertising the programme and employing one or more co-ordinators and administrative support staff. Some programmes recoup some or all of their costs from charges made to participants. For a Homeshare programme to be established in an area, there will be a need for it to spend some time awareness raising, advertising and recruiting participants. Unit costs are likely to be high initially but to reduce once the scheme has reached a 'critical mass' of participants to be able to make timely matches between compatible people.

Homeshare is not a regulated service and there are no legal restrictions on which people or organisations could set up a programme. However, some of the more successful programmes are embedded within established not for profit organisations working in the field of adult services or supported housing. A Homeshare programme is more likely to be successful if a number of partners are involved in establishing it and raising initial awareness:

- adult services, public health and community health services;
- large local employers and workforce development programmes;
- a local further or higher education establishment and student welfare groups;
- the local voluntary sector, particularly organisations for older people and carers;
- housing services;
- local politicians and others who can champion the service;
- the local academic community, in order to take an evidence-gathering approach.
